

3,000 MEMBERS ADDED TO RED CROSS BY DRIVE OF SUNDAY; TOTAL OF $3,092 COLLECTED

Well-Organized Canvass Brings Good Results But Work Will Continue.

ONE FAMILY TAKES 13

Attorney John Duggan Subscribes For Every Member of His Household; Many Refuse to Join and Reasons Are Recorded for Action.

Three thousand members of the Red Cross and $3,092.35 in payment for the memberships, is the result in a nutshell of yesterday's drive.

None of the outlying districts have yet been canvassed, and there are parts of the city proper which were not visited yesterday because the districts assigned some of the teams were a little too large for them to get over entirely. The total will go much higher than $3,000, it seems certain.

The canvass was one of the most thorough ever made in the city. It was finely organized in every particular, and with nearly 300 workers out, every single portion of the city was visited, or preparations made to visit it at a later date.

Very few people subscribed more than $1.00 membership, so the total in dollars collected represents practically the number of members of the local chapter. One person here and there would take out a $2 membership in order to receive the Red Cross magazine, which does not come with a $1 payment.

A meeting of the team captains and as many of the workers as possible will be held tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock in the Macabee hall. Mayor-elect John Duggan, director of the campaign, said this morning that the city had not been combed thoroughly as yet—that such a thing would be impossible in a half day. All those who were not at home yesterday will be visited as will those who were passed up by the workers.

With incomplete returns in many cases, the team totals are announced as follows:

In giving out these reports Treasurer J. L. Schick pointed out that many of the teams had districts much harder to work and much more unproductive than others.

Receiving the returns at the Macabee hall, Mr. Schick was assisted by Mr. Whitely, Roy Treubert, R. Montreuil, Fred Viscione, and J. D. Lam.

All but one of two pastors dismissed church early yesterday morning to allow the workers to get started at 1 o'clock. Practically all of them made the Red Cross the subject of their sermons.

The workers found their task anything but easy. Here and there they met people who opposed the Red Cross and who shut doors in the men's faces or people who wanted to argue with them about the thing before they came away. The workers certainly persevered, however, and one of the team leaders said, "I feel like I've done a little bit for the cause."

Instances where the workers were turned down were not many, but they were enough to convince those in charge of the campaign that there are people in Connellsville who are not loyal to their country in these war times. A record of all those refusing to join the Red Cross yesterday was kept. A committee will visit all these people and ascertain as far as possible whether or not they are ac-

KEEP CHRISTMAS BY AIDING THE RED CROSS—DR. VAN DYKE

With the delivery yesterday of thousands of sermons from as many American pulpits, urging membership in the American Red Cross, the Christmas campaign of the organization for 10,000,000 new members was formally started. The drive will continue until Christmas Eve by which time it is expected that the total membership in the United States will reach 15,000,000 at least.

Among those who realize from European experience since the war started the urgent need of virtually universal Red Cross membership in this country Dr. Henry Van Dyke of Princeton, formerly minister to the Netherlands. Dr. Van Dyke makes this appeal under the caption: "A Red Cross Christmas to Those Who Feel Poor."

"I write as a brother.

tually disloyal. If any are found who repeat dangerous assertions made the workers yesterday, the government will be notified and asked to send a representative here to look further into their cases.

At a Cottage avenue house, a worker was unable to get any response when he rapped at the front door and he went around to the back. Finally a woman came to the door. The worker explained that he was taking memberships for the Red Cross. "Well, you'll get nothing out of me," said the woman, thrusting the man away and shutting the door in his face.

In South Connellsville, one man took a team member inside his house and said, "Now, I want to argue with you. I've contributed to the Y. M. C. A. and the Knights of Columbus," and continued for some time in this strain. When he had finished, the worker said, "I don't care a thing about that. What I want to know is, are you or are you not going to give me a dollar for membership in the Red Cross?" The man handed over a dollar.

Several South Connellsville men of prominence, including storekeepers and business men, showed unexpected positions in the movement. One of them, declared he would not give. "You can put me down as refusing to take any part in the thing," he said. The worker put him down thus and reported him.

"Of course, such cases were very much in the minority. There were hundreds of people who came running to the door with their money all ready for the workers. There were cases where men previously unsuspected of enthusiasm for the Red Cross eagerly subscribed a dollar for every member of their families. There were cases where people, really unable to spare the dollar, managed to scrape together the necessary amount and insisted on giving it to the cause. Some of these cases actually brought tears to the eyes of the workers.

The response of the foreign-born population was especially noteworthy. Six members and $6 came from one Italian home, and there were others who subscribed in proportion. Of course, there were some people who could not understand what the thing was all about. "We don't want to buy anything," they would tell the workers.

It is believed that the largest number of memberships from one house came from that of John Duggan, Jr. Mr. Duggan took out 13 memberships, this including one for each member of his family, and for each member of his household, including maids and chauffeur. C. A. Crowley of H. L. Slick's team got this subscription.

Nine members and $9 came from J. W. McClaren's home and the same number from the McCreath-Dull home. There were any number of homes where six and five memberships were taken out.

VOTE ON PROHIBITION.

Both Wets and Drys Predict Victory in House Today.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—Both wets and drys predicted victory today when the House launched into a six hour debate which is to close at 5 o'clock this afternoon on the prohibition amendment.

The drys admitted that the wets had been gaining strength for several days but claimed 20 votes to spare over the necessary two-thirds. The wets gave no figures but predicted the defeat of the resolution by a narrow but safe margin.

ROSS WRIGHT ARRIVED IN FRANCE NOVEMBER 16, HIS LETTER SAYS

Local Boy With Engineers Has Interesting Voyage and Likes New Life.

Ross Wright landed at France, on November 16, is now hard at work with the 25th Engineers, is well, likes the country and wants some larkspur, according to a letter received by C. Roy Hetzel, which follows:

"We arrived safely in France, on November 16 after a very pleasant and interesting journey. Landed at (Here the censor took his scissors in hand and snipped out the name of the port). We then boarded the 'Hyer' and came to this camp where we have remained ever since, working very hard. I want to tell you the Army may have its Infantry, Artillery, Cavalry, Aviation and Ambulance divisions but the Engineers is the branch that is doing the real work. They have already done wonders for France and greater efforts are under way.

"It's an ordinary occurrence to see a $10,000-a-year engineer working over here with a pick and shovel; also college professors, preachers, miners, cowboys, students. In fact most every branch of civil life is represented. I, for one, am enjoying it very much. (Here the censor has clipped away the top of a page.)

"Of the feed, I have nothing to complain though you hear quite a lot of comment pro and con. However, we are not expecting an eight course dinner every meal—the food is really quite good. Everything is very expensive over here. We in town today and sampled a small cake about the size of our fig nutlets which cost me four cents. I didn't partake further.

"If it weren't for the Y. M. C. A. the soldier's life would be one dreary bit of routine. They are one big help and are doing an immense amount of help for the 'sojer.' Moving pictures and reading material galore.

"This France is a wonderful country; in fact, I never imagined there was such a spot on 'Ma' Earth—such gardens, flowers and fields. They do not have any snow in this section but it is rather damp and penetrating though occasionally we have a bright, warm sunshiny day.

"I do 'Kort still dropping in for his 'cokes.' They do not have that brand over here but plenty of something with a 'Hole-in-the-wall' is the only thing that is cheap and they bathe in it.

"Will you please send me some larkspur as it isn't to be gotten in this burg and the bugs are plentiful. Also send me some small rubber bands.

"R. C. Wright, 25th Engineers, Company B, A. E. F. via New York."

MAN WITH SON IN ARMY ABUSES RED CROSS COLLECTOR

Stream of Oaths Greets W. R. Kenney at Home of George Schomer, Fairview Ave.

OTHER UNPLEASANTNESS

"You Know We Have No Use For Red Cross" Is What Another Fairview Avenue Man Tells Wife Who Is Hesitating Whether to Give.

W. R. Kenney, one of a team working Fairview avenue for the Red Cross Sunday, had a very unpleasant experience when he called on George Schomer for a subscription. Mrs. Schomer came to the door and was inclined to be civil but Mr. Schomer is said by Mr. Kenney to have let out a stream of oaths from the back room among which could be distinguished words ordering Mr. Kenney away from the house. Schomer has a son in the Army.

The Schomer incident was reported to Red Cross headquarters and it will be reported to the United States district attorney.

Just next door to Schomer's lives a family named Johnson. Here, Mr. Kenney was also greeted by the woman of the house, who hemmed and hawed about and said she didn't know whether to give or not. Just then a man's voice came from another room, "You know you have no use for the Red Cross," and the door was closed.

In South Connellsville, S. P. Ashe was greeted with the statement that the soldiers were getting too much now, with all their comforts and no work to do. Mr. Ashe gave a few times and left.

At another South Connellsville home William Sellers met a man who wasn't enthusiastic about giving. "I'm not going to beg you for a dollar," the worker said, "but if you haven't a dollar for the Red Cross, you ought to be run out of South Connellsville." He got the dollar.

The same solicitor was told by a woman obviously very poor that she had only 35 cents but would give that. Mr. Sellers told her to keep her money and contributed a dollar for her himself. A worker in another district found another person, who could scrape together only 31 cents, and he contributed the rest of the dollar himself.

The impression that joining made one liable to be called on for work, such as sewing and knitting, held the solicitors back some. Women with large families stated that they would like to join but had not the time. In other cases, there were people who didn't know what the Red Cross was, and the purposes of the organization had to be explained to them. One of these people was a school teacher.

One man who has been ill for a long time and who starts in to work today, pulled out two $1 bills, all he had in the world, and all he would have for two weeks to come, and offered them to the workers. They took $1 and put him down for membership.

COASTER HIT BY TRAIN

Little Denton Crowley Has Miraculous Escape.

Struck by the pay car train at the Fayette street crossing over the Pennsylvania railroad about 2:30 Saturday afternoon, Denton Crowley, 12 years of age, a deaf mute, was thrown to one side by the fender of the engine, the wheels running over his toes and tearing off all the nails in such a manner that not a drop of blood was brought. The lad was struck at two places on the head, at the back, near the base of the brain and on the forehead, over the eye, and did not regain consciousness at the Cottage State hospital until 4 o'clock Sunday morning, but he was resting easily today and was expected to recover.

Privates Eligible TO COMMISSIONS IN GEN. PERSHING'S ARMY

Men Who Earn Corporals' May Attend Training School For Higher Ranks.

By Associated Press. WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Sunday, December 16.—The orders just issued by General Pershing providing for a system of promotion from the ranks, under which any private who demonstrates his ability may win a commission, makes all non-commissioned officers, over corporals, eligible for a school which is being established at a large training center for instruction of candidates for commissions.

Privates who desire to become officers must first demonstrate their efficiency by earning a promotion to non-commissioned officers. The non-commissioned officers will be sent to the training school on recommendation of their superiors which will be forwarded by the commanders of the divisions for their separate units and by the chiefs of the departmental staffs to the commander in chief.

Before submitting such recommendations the officers charged with this duty are instructed by General Pershing's order to give the most careful consideration to the records of those recommended, having in view in the case of the non-commissioned officers of the line only the fighting efficiency of his unit and in all other cases only the ability to perform these duties efficiently.

The Associated Press is exclusively entitled to the use for republication of all news dispatches credited to it in this paper and also the local news published herein.

It is worth noting, it is dangerous to our national interest and safety, to delude ourselves into believing that the war with Germany will soon be over and that the victory will be easily won.

Former President Taft said in a recent address that the war may last three to five years, and that we may have to raise an army of 5,000,000 to 7,000,000 men. Congressman Charles

P. Caldwell, a member of the House Committee on Military Affairs, is quoted as saying "it will be a long war and a war to the bitter end. It may take from 5,000,000 to 7,000,000 men from America. It will probably last from five to ten years longer. The price is going to be high, but liberty is cheap at any price."

Germany is straining every nerve and resource to take full advantage of the favorable situation resulting from the collapse of Russia as a factor on the side of the Allies. Superhuman efforts are being made for a drive through the French and British lines in France and Flanders. The offensive against the Italians has been strengthened and the U-boat campaign greatly intensified.

While Germany holds out the hope of victory to urge its soldiers to a supreme display of courage, these activities are intended to be more for political effect and to nerve the German civilian population to new sacrifices. At the same time they show that the power of Germany is by no means broken and that she is not yet ready to concede a peace except upon her own terms.

The war lords of Germany and Austria-Hungary realize that defeat means the destruction of their power and of the Hohenzollern and Hapsburg dynasties, hence they have resolved to fight desperately to the bitter end. As nothing short of overwhelming defeat will cause them to yield, the allied nations, of which we are now one, are face to face with what Premier Lloyd George of England calls, "the most trying hour of the war."

"It would be folly," added this blunt spoken leader of the British government, "to underestimate the danger; equally to exaggerate it, and the greatest folly of all not to face it."

We must face the danger and in facing it we must nerve ourselves for a long and desperate contest, meantime throwing into our preparation every ounce of our strength and every resource of men, money and material.

EXTERMINATING A PEOPLE.

We have a certain familiarity with the crimes against civilization which Germany committed in Belgium under the guise of "military necessity." Of the still more wanton and revolting barbarities practiced upon another unoffending people by one of Germany's allies less has become known, but the

The spirit and pride of many young men, who preferred to enlist rather than to be drafted, has been saved from the firing line of the War Department directing the acceptance, up to noon Saturday, of all qualified applicants, subject to examination later. Secretary Baker stumbled onto some really sensible ideas at times—after somebody has put him wise to them.

The dust in the gas pipes was as nothing compared with that raised outside of them when breakfast failed to arrive on schedule time those frosty mornings.

In its order permitting the operators of mines employing non-union labor to charge $2.48 for coal, by posting notice of wage increase, the Fuel Administration seems merely to have confirmed what was already being done.

Governor Brumbaugh appointed a Johnstown attorney, who died a year ago, as one of the local assistants to the registrars in that city. Other appointments by his Excellency might be named as belonging to the same class, although the obsequies have not yet been performed.

The annual report of Secretary of War Baker is described as "void of information." This term is never out of place when used in connection with any document emanating from this source.

Congress has accommodated given President Wilson another six months in which to spend the $30,000,000 emergency fund, the $100,000,000 emergency fund, who dare say that Congress is not "standing by the President?"

Don't you feel better today for having taken membership in the Red Cross yesterday?

Mazin V. Cartouhers in New York Times. A set complete of thick, grey wool I've knit for some mother's son. Weaving a wish, and my needles clicked. In the stitches every one.

"Helmet," I whispered, "do your best to keep the north winds out. Put snug and warm this soldier's head. Put Winter's frost to rout!"

"Wristlets comfort his aching hands. So chapped with the cold and red. Steady his fingers to aim and fire. For our country's cause," I said.

"Sweater and muffler," ran my prayer. "Chief of all your part—Cling close as the arms of her he loves. Round his brave and lonely heart!"

And sweater, helmet, wristlets and scarf (Or so it seemed to me). To keep their special soldier warm. Have promised faithfully.

"I'M A GENUINE BOOSTER," SAYS OFFICER HENRY

Well Known Erie Policeman
Pays Tanlac Fine
Tribute.

William R. Henry, the well-known Erie policeman, who resides at 420 German street, Erie, Pa., made the following interesting statement recently regarding the benefits he had received from Tanlac, the new combatant, tonic, appetizer and invigorant, that is now accomplishing such remarkable results in this city. Mr. Henry said:

"My stomach was out of order and I did not feel refreshed from my sleep.

"After taking Tanlac for about two weeks my stomach is now in good shape. My appetite and digestion are perfect, and I can eat anything. My sleep is fine. You can say for me that Tanlac is one good medicine, and that it is a booster for Tanlac."

There is not a single portion of the body not benefited by the healthful work of Tanlac, which begins its action by stimulating the digestive and assimilative organs, thereby enriching the blood and invigorating the whole body.

Tanlac enables the stomach to thoroughly digest its food, thereby permitting the assimilable products to be converted into blood, bone and muscle.

Tanlac is being sold here at the Connelville Drug company store.

Tanlac can also be secured in Dunbar at D. S. Eason's Drug Store.—Adv.

PEETZ DINK—Why Not a Napkin Ring or Something Useful?

At the Theatres

THE PARAMOUNT.

"THE ADOPTED SON."—A Metro feature, with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, in the leading roles, is being presented today. "The Adopted Son" is a story of a mountain life told of two old families of Eastern Tennessee, of the amazing way in which the feud was bitterly fought and the equally amazing way in which peace was finally won. Throughout this six-act super-feature story is laid on the fact that character counts. A man's work in a man's world, with the love of a true woman to make it brighter is the work done by "Two Gun" Carter, a role played by Francis X. Bushman. J. W. Johnston, who won the admiration of Metro patrons in "God's Half Acre," with Mabel Tralferro as the star, is seen in the support of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne. Tomorrow George Hernandez will be seen in "Up or Down," a five part Triangle feature. Wednesday, a Bluebird attraction, "The Savage," with Ruth Clifford in the leading role, will be presented. Thursday, "The Good For Nothing," a five part World production, starring Carlyle Blackwell, Muriel Ostriche and Evelyn Grealy, will be shown. Friday and Saturday the Fox "Kiddies" will be seen in "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," a Fox Standard picture. On Christmas Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Stranded in Arcadia," will be the attraction. Ethel Dexter is seen in the support of Mrs. Castle.

THE ARCADE.

"THE TABARIN GIRLS."—Heralded as the best singing show on the Sun circuit, Dave Newman's Tabarin Girls put in at the Arcade today for a week's stay. With many novel features, including a girl trio, a girl quartet and a mixed sextet, a base singer of unusual ability, a coloratura soprano, and a soft shoe dancer of reputation, the organization has talent in abundance. The comedy is in the hands of Mr. Newman and Happy Freyer. The company was at Fairmont week before last and the West Virginian, a paper that usually roasts ordinary shows, said it was "an attraction of merit, and irresistibly appeals to the lovers of clean, progressive amusement such as one would expect to find in the big musical comedies, such playing only in the best houses in the larger cities at top prices. The chorus is exceptionally pretty and sings and dances flawlessly. The costumes and the lighting effects and scenic embellishments add beauty to the show." Billie Burke will be on the screen today and tomorrow.

ORPHEUM THEATRE.

"WHAT MONEY CAN'T BUY."—A photodramatic version by Bouhal Marie Dix of George Broadhurst's famous drama features Jack Pickford and Louise Huff. Dick Hale's father is trying to get a concession to build a railroad through the principality, which is opposed by Texler, the king's son. How the adventuresome young American and the young princess fall in love, how he is imprisoned in the lonely castle by his jealous rival, how the princess permits herself and her little brothers to be captured by the American, how affairs finally straightened out by a brilliant ruse, will naturally have to be seen to be appreciated.

SOISSON THEATRE.

The Angell Stock company will enter on its second week at the Soisson theatre in the high class comedy drama, "An American Girl." RECEIPTS BIG Motor Licenses for 1918 Will Break Records.

HARRISBURG, Dec. 17.—Receipts for 1918 motor vehicle registrations and licenses already amount to more than four times the total revenue derived from these sources during the entire year of 1917, according to a statement issued by the State Highway Department today.

The automobile division of the State Highway Department to date has received $285,548 for 1918 registrations and licenses; during the year 1917 these receipts amounted to $59,804.91. That the State Highway Department is determined to enforce the automobile law against individuals using 1917 tags on January 1 seems to be understood generally, as applications are coming in daily in increasing numbers.

J. Denny O'Neill, state highway commissioner, has already announced that there will be no extension of the use of 1917 tags, as they are being received from the manufacturers in quantities large enough to insure prompt filling of all applications, so that tardy applicants for proper registration cards and licenses need expect no leniency.

The statement also directs attention to the fact that, under the law, no municipality, city, or borough, has the right to extend to car owners and to operators the privilege of using old tags or to operate motor vehicles on January 1 without tags.

Meyersdale.

MEYERSDALE, Dec. 17.—The Red Cross Headquarters which had been closed for two weeks has again opened, and everything is in good working order. Vacancies caused by Mrs. Flora S. Dill will hereafter have that in charge. Mrs. Mary E. McKenzie was appointed center of the sewing section. The sewers meet every Tuesday and Thursday afternoons. Mrs. W. H. Ryland, chairman of the surgical dressing section, has her class meet on Friday evenings, and the knitters meet on Monday evenings and the chairman, Mrs. S. B. Johnson, wishes all to turn in their work next Monday so she can make another shipment before Christmas. Clayton Wade was a visitor to Frostburg, Md., on Friday. Mrs. A. C. Kennell and daughter, Ida Elizabeth of Cumberland, have returned home after a few days' visit here with the former's mother, Mrs. Ida Staub. THE YUKON TRAIL

A Tale of the North

By William MacLeod Raife

About a mile below the falls he met two men. One of them was Colby Macdonald. He carried a coil of rope over one shoulder. The big Alaskan explained that he had not been able to get it out of his head that perhaps the climbers who had waded at his party had been in difficulties. So he had got a rope from the cabin of an old miner and was on his way back to the falls.

The three climbed to the falls, crossed the bridge and reached the top of the cliff.

"You know the lay of the land down there, Mr. Elliot. We'll lower you," decided Macdonald, who took command as a matter of course.

Gordon presently stood beside Sheba on the little platform. She had quite recovered from the touch of hysteria that had attacked her courage. "You weren't long," was all she said.

"I met them coming," he answered as he dropped the loop of the rope over her head and arranged it under her shoulders.

He showed her how to relieve part of the strain of the rope on her flesh by using her hands to lift.

"All ready?" Macdonald called from above.

"All ready," Elliot answered. To Sheba he said, "Hold tight."

"The girl was swung from the ledge and rose jerkily in the air. She laughed gaily down at her friend below.

"It's fun."

Gordon followed her a couple of minutes later. She was waiting to give him a hand over the edge of the cliff. "Miss O'Neill, this is Mr. Macdonald," he said, as soon as he had freed himself from the rope. "You are fellow passengers on the Hannah."

Macdonald was looking at her straight and hard. "Your father's name—was it Farrell O'Neill?" he asked bluntly.

"Yes."

"I knew him."

The girl's eyes lit. "I'm glad, Mr. Macdonald. That's one reason I wanted to come to Alaska—to hear about my father's life here. Will you tell me?"

"Some time. We must be going now to catch the boat—after I've had a look at the cliff this young man crawled across."

He turned away, abruptly, it struck Elliot, and climbed down the natural stairway up which the young man had come. Presently he rejoined these above. Macdonald looked at Elliot with a new respect.

"You're in luck, my friend, that we're not carrying you from the foot of the cliff," he said dryly. "I wouldn't cross that rock wall for a hundred thousand dollars in cold cash."

"Nor I again," admitted Gordon with a laugh. "But we had either to home-stead that plateau or vacate it. I preferred the latter."

Miss O'Neill's deep eyes looked at him. She was about to speak, then changed her mind.

CHAPTER V.

Sheba sings—and Two Men Listen. Elliot did not see Miss O'Neill next morning until she appeared in the dining room for breakfast. He timed himself to get through so as to join her when she left. They strolled out to the deck together.

He came abruptly to what was on his mind. "I have an apology to make, Miss O'Neill. If I made light of your danger yesterday, it was because I was afraid you might break down. I had to seem unsympathetic rather than risk that."

She smiled forgiveness. "All you said was that I might have sprained my wrist. It was true too. I might have—and I did." Sheba showed a white linen bandage tied tightly around her wrist.

"Your whole weight came on it with a wrench. No wonder it hurt."

Sheba noticed that the Hannah was drawing up to a wharf and the passengers were lining up with their belongings. "Is this where we change?"

"Those of us going to Kusink transfer here. But there's no hurry. We wait at this landing two hours."

Gordon helped Sheba move her baggage to the other boat and joined her on deck. They were both strangers to the land. Their only common acquaintance was Macdonald and he was leaving. Macdonald absorbed his attention just now. Left to their own resources, the two young people naturally drifted together a good deal.

This suited Elliot. He found his companion wholly delightful, not the least because she was so different from the girls he knew at home. She could be frank, and even shyly audacious on occasion, but she held a little note of reserve he felt bound to respect.

Macdonald left the boat twenty fathoms below Kusink with Mrs. Mallory and the Selfridges. A chauffeur with a motorcar was waiting on the wharf to run them to town, but he gave the wheel to Macdonald and took the seat beside the driver.

"Are you going to the hotel or direct to your cousin's?" Gordon asked Miss O'Neill.

"To my cousin's. I fancy she's down here to meet me. It was arranged that I come on this boat."

Elliot caught a glimpse of the only people in Kusink he had known before coming in, but though he waved to them he saw they did not recognize him. After the usual delay about getting ashore he walked down the gangway carrying the suitcase of the Irish girl. Sheba followed at his heels. On the wharf he came face to face with a slender, well-dressed young woman. "Diane!" he cried.

She stared at him. "You? What in heaven's name are you doing here, Gordon Elliot?" she demanded, and before he could answer had seized both hands and turned excitedly to call a stocky man near. "Peter—Peter! Guess who's here?"

"Hello, Paget!" grinned Gordon and he shook hands with the husband of Diane.

Elliot turned to introduce his friend but she anticipated him.

"Cousin, Diane," she said dryly, "don't you know me?"

Mrs. Paget swooped down upon the girl and smothered her in her embrace.

"This is Sheba—little Sheba that I have told you so often about, Peter," she cried. "Glorious! I'm glad to see you, child." And Diane kissed her again warmly. "You two met on the same boat, of course, coming in. I hope you didn't let her get lonesome, Gordon. Look after Sheba's suitcase, Peter. You'll come to dinner tonight, Gordon—at seven."

"I'm in the kind hands of my countryman," laughed Gordon. "I'll certainly be on hand."

"But what in the world are you doing here? You're the last man I'd have expected to see."

"I'm in the service of the government, and I've been sent in on business."

"Well, I'm going to say something original, dear people," Mrs. Paget ruffled. "It's a small world, isn't it?"

While he was dressing for dinner later in the day, Elliot recalled early memories of the Pagets. He had known Diane ever since they had been youngsters together at school. He remembered her as a restless, very little thing, keen as a knife-blade. Always popular socially, she had surprised everybody by refusing the call of the town to marry a young mining engineer without a penny. Gordon was in college at the time, but during the next long vacation he had fraternized a good deal with the Peter Pagets. The young married people had been very much in love with each other, but not too preoccupied to take the college boy into their happiness as a comrade. Then the Arctic goldfields had claimed Paget and his bride. That had been more than twenty years ago, and until today Gordon had not seen them since.

While Elliot was brushing his dinner coat before the open window of the room assigned to him at the hotel, somebody came out to the porch below. The voice of a woman floated faintly to him.

"Seen Diane's Irish beauty yet, Ned?"

"Yes," a man answered.

The woman laughed softly. "Mrs. Mallory came up on the same boat with her." The reflection suggested that the words were meant not to tell a fact, but some less obvious inference.

"She's wonderfully pretty, and of course Diane will make the most of her. But Mrs. Mallory is a woman among ten thousand."

"I'd choose the girl if it were me," said the man.

"But it isn't you. We'll see what we'll see."

They were moving up the street and Gordon heard no more. What he had heard was not clear to him. Why should any importance attach to the fact that Mrs. Mallory and Sheba O'Neill had come up the river on the same boat? Yet he was vaguely disturbed by the intimation that in some way Diane was entering her cousin as a rival of the older woman. He resented the idea that the fine, young personality of the Irish girl was being cheapened by management on the part of Diane Paget.

Elliot was not the only dinner guest at the Paget home that evening. He found Colby Macdonald sitting in the living room with Sheba. She came quickly forward to meet the newly arrived guest.

"Mr. Macdonald has been telling me about my father. He knew him on Frenchman creek where they both worked claims," explained the girl.

The big mining man made no comment and added nothing to what she said. There were times when his face was about as expressive as a stone wall.

The dinner went off very well. Diane and Peter had a great many questions to ask Gordon about old friends. By the time these had been answered Macdonald was chatting easily with Sheba. She listened with glowing eyes to his strange tales this man of magnificent horizons had to tell. Never before had she come into contact with anyone like him.

Paget was superintendent of the Lucky Strike, a mine owned principally by Macdonald. The two talked business for a few minutes over their cigars, but Diane interrupted gaily to bring them back into the circle. Adroitly she started Macdonald on the account of a rescue of two men lost in a blizzard the year before. He had the gift of dramatizing his story, of selecting only effective details. There was no suggestion of boasting. If he happened to be the hero of any of his stories the fact was of no importance to him. It was merely a detail of the picture he was sketching.

Gordon interrupted with a question a story he was telling of a fight he had seen between two bull moose.

"Did you say that was while you were on the way over to inspect the Kamatah coal fields for the first time?"

The eyes of the young man were quick with interest.

"Four years ago last spring?" Macdonald looked at him with a wary steadiness. Some doubt had found lodgment in his mind. Before he could voice it, if, indeed, he had any such intention, Elliot broke in swiftly.

"Don't answer that question. I asked it without proper thought. I am a special agent of the general land office sent up to investigate the Macdonald coal claims and kindred interests."

"Don't Answer That Question."

Slowly the rigor of the big Scotsman's steady eyes relaxed to a smile that was genial and disarming. If this news hit him hard he gave no sign of it. And that it was an unexpected blow there could be no doubt.

"Glad you've come, Mr. Elliot. We ask nothing but fair play. The men who own the Macdonald group of claims have nothing to conceal. I'll answer that question. I meant to say two years ago last spring."

His voice was easy and his gaze unwavering as he made the correction, yet everybody in the room except Sheba knew he was deliberately lying to cover the slip. For the admission that he had inspected the Kamatah field just before his dumplings had fled upon it would at least tend to aggravate suspicion that the entries were not bona fide.

Sheba unconsciously relieved the situation.

"But what about the big moose Mr. Macdonald? What did it do then?"

The Alaskan went back to his story. He was talking for Sheba alone, for the young girl, with eager, fascinated eyes which flashed with sympathy as they devoured selected glimpses of his wild, turbulent career. She saw him with other eyes than Elliot's. The government official admired him tremendously. Macdonald was an empire builder. He blazed trails for others to follow in safety. But Gordon could guess how cautiously his path was strewn with brutality, with the effects of an ethical color-blindness largely selfish, though even he did not know that the man's primitive jungle code of wolf eat wolf had played havoc with Sheba's young life many years before.

Diane, satisfied that Macdonald had seemed, called upon Sheba.

"I want you to stay for us, dear, if you will."

Sheba accompanied herself. The voice of the girl had no unusual range, but it was singularly sweet and full of the poignant feeling that expresses the haunting pathos of her race.

"It's well I know ye, Sheba Cross. To weary, stony hill An' I'm tired, oh, I'm tired to be looking on ye still. For here I live the near side an' he is on the far. An' all your thoughts and hollows are between us, so they are, Och anee!"

Gordon, as he listened, felt the strange hunger of that homesick cry steal through his blood. He saw his own emotions reflected in the face of the Scotch-Canadian, who was watching with a tense interest the slim, young figure at the piano, the girl whose eyes were soft and dewy with the mysticism of her people, were still luminous with the poetry of the child in spite of the years that heralded her a woman.

Elliot intercepted the triumphant sweep of Diane's glance from Macdonald to her husband. In a flash it lit up for him the words he had heard on the hotel porch. Diane, an inveterate matchmaker, intended her cousin to marry Colby Macdonald. No doubt she thought she was doing a fine thing for the girl. He was a millionaire, the biggest figure in the Northwest. His iron will ran the town and district as though the people were chattels of his. Back of him were some of the biggest financial interests in the United States.

But the gorge of Elliot rose. The man, after all, was a lawbreaker, a menace to civilization. He was a survivor, by reason of his strength, from the primitive wolf-pack. The very look of his hard, gray eyes was dominant and masterful. He would win, no matter how. It came to Gordon's rebel heart that if Macdonald would this lovely Irish girl—and the young man never doubted that the Scotsman would want her—he would reach out and gather in Sheba just as if she were a coal mine or a placer prospect.

All this surged through the mind of the young man while the singer was on the first line of the second stanza.

These Metropolitan Stars Your Christmas Guests

THAT would be a privilege wouldn't it—to have these eminent artists singing to you in your own home? "But the idea is preposterous," you reply. "It's inconceivable."

Far from it. So far as the enjoyment of music is concerned you can sit in your own living room and revel in the beauty of Marie Rappold's wonderful voice, for example, exactly as though the great diva were standing there in the flesh. And the same applies to any other of our assemblage of world-renowned artists.

The NEW EDISON

"The Phonograph with a Soul"

re-creates the human voice with such accuracy, such fidelity—it renders so complete and perfect a reproduction, that no human ear can distinguish the slightest difference between the living artist and the record.

This is not a claim; it is an established fact. Over one million people have attended our famous tone tests where 25 eminent artists sang in direct comparison with the New Edison's Re-Creation of their own interpretations, and not one could tell where the voice left off and the record began. In the case of instrumentalists the verdict was the same. 51 newspaper critics have gone on record to this effect. Thomas A. Edison has not merely imitated,—he has actually re-created the human voice.

A Gift Which Means a Life Enriched

As a Christmas gift what can equal a New Edison? It adds something real and vital to life. Why not purchase one as a family gift? Eliminate the small individual presents to one another, pool your funds and secure a "Phonograph with a Soul."
